

Painting In a World Of Photography

אגודת הצירים והפסלים בישראל

PAINTING IN A WORLD OF PHOTOGRAPHY

PAINTERS AND SCULPTORS ASSOCIATION, ISRAEL
9 ALHARIZI ST., TEL-AVIV
OCTOBER 1994

CURATOR: IRIT SEGOLY
ASSISTANT: SIVAN BEN ARI

EXHIBITION SUPPORTED BY MINSTRY
OF SCIENCE AND THE ARTS,
ARTS AND CULTURE ADMINSTRATION

CATALOGUE PRODUCED WITH THE GENEROUS
ASSISTANCE OF THE ISRATEC ENGINEERING CO. LTD.

ישראטק הנדסה בע"מ
ISRATEC ENGINEERING LTD.

BACK COVER: YITZHAK LIVNEH,
VERONICA'S HANDKERCHIEF, 1993, OIL ON CANVAS, 70X50
FRONT COVER: ARNON BEN-DAVID,
PAINTING ANALOGICAL TO OFFSET PRINT, 1990,
ACRYLIC ON CANVAS, 77.5X93.5
EDITOR: IRIT SEGOLY
HEBREW COPY EDITING: TEMPA BOLESLAVSKY
ENGLISH TRANSLATION AND COPY EDITING: NAOMI GOLDBERG
PHOTOGRAPHS: SHLAG OPHIR

PLATES: H.S. HALFI
PRINTED IN ISRAEL BY SABRANSKY PRESS LTD.
© THE PAINTER AND SCULPTORS ASSOCIATION ISRAEL

MEASUREMENTS ARE GIVEN IN CENTIMETERS,
HEIGHT PRECEDING WIDTH

Painting In a World Of Photography

ARNON BEN DAVID

DGANIT BEREST

DAVID GINTON

DAVID GOSS

YITZCHAK LIVNEH

YACOV MISHORI

DAVID REEB

DANNY TABAK

WHAT WE (DON'T) SEE

Irit Segoly

"The person we look at, or who feels he is being looked at, looks at us in turn. To perceive the aura of an object we look at means to invest it with the ability to look at us in return."[1]

The work of art toqether with the world lost a great deal of it's ability to "look at us in return" during the process whereby it was turned into an object of photography and mechanical reproduction. What has been especially damaged, as Benjamin shows, is the authenticity of the work of art: "The authenticity of a thing is the essence of all that is transmissible from its beginning, ranging from its substantive duration to its testimony to the history which it has experienced."[2]

A photograph acts as a carrier of information: whether it's presenting a product or a commercial slogan, a portrait of the prime minister or a work of art - it always tries to hide its own presence. This is its strategy for representing the world: to show and not be seen. In contrast to the legendary figure of one who sees-and-is-not-seen - a sort of eye without a body - the photographed figure is one who is seen-and-cannot-see, who will never return your gaze (fig. 1).

The act of photographing as a means of advertising, propaganda and mass manipulation, succeeds all the more that it causes its own signs to disappear: the grain and marks that are impressed on it during developing and printing (in photography), and the resolution (in television and movies). This can be formulated simply: the better the technology that produces and reproduces the photograph, the more transparent the photograph, and the greater its effectiveness as a means of propaganda and advertising.

"...photography freed the hand of the most important artistic functions which henceforth devolved only upon the eye looking into a lens."[3] This new reality irreversibly changed painting's standing in society and its perception of itself. From here on, painting often moved in circles of seclusion, provocation or flattery. The paintings before us point to a strong desire to break out of these circles.

The exhibition "Painting in a World of Photography" presents paintings whose images are taken from photographs. The paintings deal with the technical sides of photography and reproduction, and with the images of the world as they are

1. Walter Benjamin, Charles Baudelaire: A Lyric Poet in the Era of High Capitalism (London, Verso, 1973), p. 148

2. Walter Benjamin, "The Work of Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction", Illuminations (New York, Schocken, 1969), p. 221.

11.

MARCEL BROODTEARS
L'OEUIL DE PIERRETTE, GLASS JAR WITH INSERTED PHOTOGRAPH OF AN EYE, 1965

מארסל ברוטהרס
מיכל זכוכית שהוכנס לתוכו
תצלום של עין, 1965

3. Ibid, p. 219.

reflected/falsified in the photograph. They draw our attention to the photograph, and teach us to differentiate between the photograph and the photographed.

The participants in the exhibition are Arnon Ben David, with analogies of offset print; Dganit Berest, with metaphors for grain; Yacov Mishori, with paintings that relate to printing's false coloring; and Danny Tabak, with paintings which deal with the television screen's resolution. These four painters blur the photographs' transparency by emphasizing its technical components. David Reeb presents paintings of photograph contact sheets, in which first and foremost one sees the contact sheets and only afterwards the photographed figures, this in contrast to the action of a photograph appearing, for example, in a newspaper; David Ginton presents painting which acts as photomontage; David Goss - a photograph of a television picture which gradually turns into a painting; and Yitzchak Livneh displays paintings that confer "body" on the photographs and turns them into objects that can no longer be recorded by the camera.

These paintings challenge the hegemony of photography as representative and witness of the world, and at the same time they accentuate the testimonial abilities of the painting itself. The painting, being both a durable object (compared with a photograph), and also mobile in terms of time and place (as compared with an installation), has once again been found worthy of bearing testimony and making historical continuity possible. For example, even today, with the beginning of the peace process and the gradual removal of the burden of occupation, the status of paintings based on photographs which record the Israeli occupation is changing, from being testimony of the present to documents of historical evidence. (Reeb, Ben David).

An additional issue which the paintings address is the position of the viewer in relation to the piece. The painting of the mirror (Livneh) adds an additional, third, contrasting option to the two perspectives - one of the painting as "window" and the other opposite perception of the painting as a closed, "flat" object, devoid of any dimension of illusion - it reflects the viewer and the space in front of itself. The viewer thus becomes part of the piece - the viewer/painting boundary grows more diffuse than ever.

Another question raised for discussion is the validity of the distinction between figurative and abstract painting: In the paintings of television screen resolution (Tabak), for example, the painting depicts an image, while what we see is an abstract painting. Is this a figurative or an abstract painting?

I see the paintings in the exhibition as a course by which painting shakes itself free from photography's pressure. The paintings presented are characterized by manual brush strokes, generally using acrylic or traditional oil-paints. All the studios that I visited looked like small artisan workshops - the only features relating to modern technology were those connected with photography. The image which sustains the pieces does, indeed, originate in photography, but the continuous, repetitive acts of painting emplace the photograph in the position of being a mere point of departure. The meaning of the old-new manual brush-work is worthy of attention and examination.

The paintings presented here act out of acquaintance with local and international painting traditions. On the international level, mention should be made of Georges Seurat and the Pointillists, Surrealist photography, Marcel Broodtears from Belgium (fig. 11), Andy Warhol, Gerhard Richter and Sigmar Polke from Germany (figs. 2&12) , and contemporary staged photography. The paintings' affinity to the central trend in local painting - the "poverty of materials" approach - is compound. Mishori's and Ginton's position is one of rebellion: their painting reveals impulses and juicy materiality; in Ben David's and Reeb's painting the directness and centrality of political contents are conspicuous, while in Berest's work it is the systematic series that stand out. In contrast to them, Livneh, Tabak and Goss are light-years away from "poverty of materials", as though they stem from a different starting point.

In an unusual course of action in Israeli art, in 1970, Moshe Gershuni drew a circle around the head of his great-grandfather on an enlargement of a photograph taken in Poland in 1910 (fig. 3). The photograph is the only option to represent the family's past, and Gershuni, as a conceptual artist, intervenes and leaves his mark on it. Twenty-four years later, Gershuni sits in front of his son, the painter Aram Gershuni, who morning after morning, for several months, paints his 12.

SIGMAR POLKE, LUCKY LUKE
AND HIS FRIENDS, (DETAIL)
ACRYLIC AND OIL ON CANVAS 110X130, 1971-1975

זיגמר פולקה, לוק בר-מזל וחבריו (פרט),
אקריליק ושמן על בד, 110X130, 1971-1975

father's face using classical technique, oil-paints on a small wooden panel (fig. 4). This is not a naive attempt to return to the use of a dead language; there is intent here to revive and reactivate the skill, concentration and attention which have become redundant in the technological world - to restore the "aura" - without playing with the illusion of restoring to painting its historical centrality. This position is possible thanks to the intensive and critical dealing with photography, of which this exhibition is part.

4.

ARAM GERSHUNI, UNTITLED
OIL ON PAPER GLUED ON WOOD, 40X30, 1994

3.

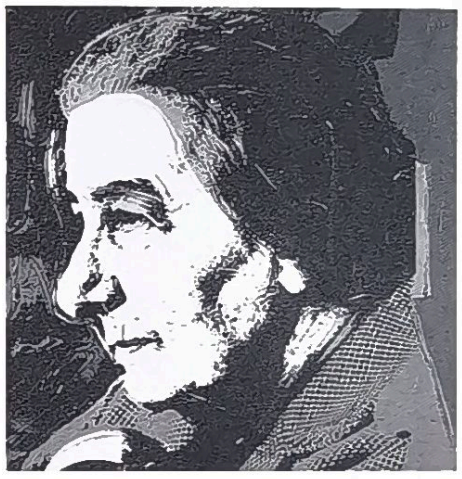

MOSHE GERSHUNI
MY GREAT-GRANDFATHER, MOSES
SON OF ANONYMOUS,
WOOD CARVER, PLOCHEK, POLAND, 1910,
TREATED PHOTOGRAPH, 30X40, 1970
EXHIBITION: "CONCEPT + INFORMATION"
ISRAEL MUSEUM, 1971, CURATOR YONA FISHER

This presentation does not aim to relate to each participant's complete body of work. The paintings were chosen according to my perception of their affinity to the subject of the exhibition. Accordingly, the text relating to each artist presents only a partial aspect of his or her work, and of the interpretation that it deserves.

Yacov Mishori: Painting of a Rock & Roll Record Jacket

At the end of the seventies, Yacov Mishori, a self-taught painter, turned his back on the local tradition of painting with impoverished materials - plywood, collage, emulsion and diluted acrylic paints, a repressed "self" and concealed sexuality. As a Tel Aviv youngster, he was enchanted with the rock music of Velvet Underground and Roxy Music, with Hollywood movies, pornographic magazines and art books filled with reproductions of "great" artists - an entire world of chrome photography, both exclusive and cheap, and of provocatively externalized drives. Through the jackets of pop records, Mishori also became acquainted with Andy Warhol and his "factory".

In an exhibition that was called "Self-Portrait", Mishori presented large portraits of women - icons of sexuality, seduction, cunning and death (page 13). As opposed to Andy Warhol - who deals with printing techniques' taking over of man and his representations (figs 5&13), and with the transformation of man into the object of the media and of reproduction techniques - Mishori takes an anonymous beauty from a magazine and turns her into the subject, into a painting icon. Here the tempting make-up becomes a paint stain, a scar, a wound dripping with meaty red oil-paint. Mishori's feminine icon is replete with hints of the immature sexuality of a boy of sorts, made-up like a woman, who sends oblique glances full of promises never to be kept. The expectation raised by the exhibition's title (Self-Portrait), together with the female portrait, accord androgyny a central role in the piece. Androgyny functions here as a spell against death: it hints at the denial of the possibility of fertility, and contains a promise of halting, freezing and preventing the process that leads to fertility and birth - and thereby to death.

13.

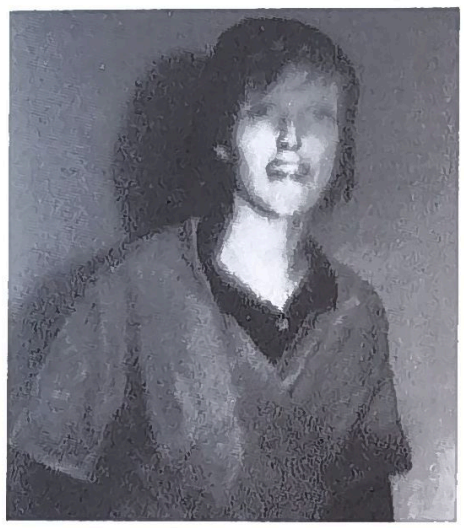

ANDY WARHOL, GOLDA MEIR, 1975

אנדי וורהול, גולדה מאיר, 1975

Yitzchak Livneh: Painting that Refuses to be Reproduced

The secret hidden in Yitzchak Livneh's paintings is the moment which comes before memory is evoked, and the screens waiting to receive (or block) it; this is at the heart of Livneh's wonderful, hard-to-decipher project. The painting series "Mirrors", "Veronica" (back cover), and paintings based on photographs from the outset of photography, maintain a link to a critical moment: the industrial revolution and the appearance of photography and reproduction in the middle of the 19th century.

Veronica's handkerchief is the one with which, according to Christian tradition, 14.

GERHARD RICHTER, CONFRONTATION 2,
OIL ON CANVAS 112X102, 1988
FROM SERIES "18. OKTOBER 1977"

גרהארד ריכטר, עימות 2,
שמן על בד, 112X102, 1988
מתוך הסידרה "18 באוקטובר 1977"

15.

YITZHAK LIVNEH, GERMAN LANDSCAPE,
OIL ON CANVAS 50X70, 1993

יצחק ליבנה, נוף גרמני,
שמן על בד, 50X70, 1993

Veronica wiped the sweat and blood from Christ's face on his way to the cross, imprinting his countenance upon it. This handkerchief is perceived as an ancient metaphor for photography (the handkerchief as photography paper, Christ's sweat as developing material). Christ's image is impressed on the handkerchief on strength of the power of the aura emanating from him. Veronica gathered it up, but the aura was not weakened and continued to abound. Photography, as we know it, operates in the exact opposite manner: it dwarfs the "aura" of the real experience. Walter Benjamin writes of the camera: "...the camera records our likeness without returning our gaze. But looking at someone carries the implicit expectation that our look will be returned by the object of our gaze. Where this expectation is met [...] there is an experience of the aura to the fullest extent."[4]

Livneh's paintings have a strong "here and now" presence, enticing, mysterious and impossible to reproduce. The comparison between Gerhard Richter (figs. 7& 14) and Livneh is justified, particularly in this matter: the painting's refusal to be photographed. A photograph of a painting in which a photograph is painted will cause the painting to become almost invisible: when the dimensions and materiality disappear, the painting will disappear as well. Thus the painting manages to dodge its fate - of being an object of photography; the "here and now" of the painting manages to neutralize the technological system. Creating "something" whose essence the photograph cannot touch, restores to the photograph the resurrecting glance of the viewer - the painting declares itself inconvertible.

The "Mirror" paintings, as well, point to the limitations inherent in photography: the painting of the mirror reflects the viewer and the space in front of it. It raises the question: if the viewer is reflected in the painting, then where is the painting? When you look out a window and see yourself reflected, you do not see the view, and when you see the view you don't see yourself. In the photograph of the painting of the mirror, we can see only the spots that Livneh painted on the mirror or on its frame.

Can we see in Livneh's projects courses at whose base lies a desire to reconstruct the experience of aura? What fascinates Livneh about the German landscape (fig. 15), the woman sitting with her back to the camera (page 23), the man beside the swimming-pool (fig. 6), is the mystery surrounding the blurred photographs, which hint at a world of lost memories. Livneh paints many pictures from each photograph; again and again he comes back to the figure or place, as though trying to uncover the secret of their indecipherable mode of attraction.

4. See Benjamin, note 1, p.147.

Arnon Ben David: Analogical Painting to Offset Printing*

Arnon Ben David is represented here by paintings from the series "Down With The Occupation." This slogan appears as the title of a painting of the newspaper photograph depicting a meeting of Gorbachev (then president of the U.S.S.R.) and his wife Raisa with Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany. The picture raises various aspects: the speed with which politics become history; the nature and complexity of the changes that occurred in the relations between the title and the painting; and painting as historical testimony (front cover; page 19).

The painting also functions here as evidence of newspaper photographs' process of production on offset print. The painting reconstructs the processes of separation of the colors and their printing one by one in the following order: yellow, red, blue and black. Ben David works this way as well: he goes over a slide with diluted acrylic paint using a coarse brush. Color by color - yellow, red, blue, black - he goes over the slide and then he dries it. The hand of the painter has turned into one which reconstructs the reproduction process and creates a painting whose formation process is analogical to offset print. Thus print, which had taken the "Here and now" from works of art, eventually became their very subject.

Dganit Berest: Conferring a Body on a Digital Entity*

The painting series "Small Bather in Numbers" is part of an extensive series of paintings of bathers (page 17), which is based on photographs that Dganit Berest took on Tel Aviv's beach. The "grain" - the units from which the photograph is composed - is indifferent to the image. The grain formed the starting point for the development of new, open "languages" of form - circles, squares, numbers, dots - each one carrying with it memories from other lives: the squares were once a table-cloth, the numbers represented the sum of a debt or a birthday date, etc. The distribution of the grain in the photograph is random - the image is formed from the exposure to light while photographing and developing.

In Berest's painting the randomness is controlled. Only the control employed by the eye and hand enable the image itself to be revealed: even the most indistinct revelation is possible only because of decisions, compromises, adaptations, fabrications, and discipline which the painter employs in the meeting areas between figure and background.

By drawing white numbers on a black background, Berest relates to the conceptual work of the Polish painter Roman Opalka, who for the past twenty-five years has been painting white numbers on a background beginning in black and growing slowly lighter, until it finally reaches the painting's point of disappearance - white on white.

Numbers belong to both the realm of writing and the realm of digital language. The obsessive brush-work confers on them a life of body and material.

David Reeb: Paintings of Contact sheets

We have grown so accustomed to seeing David Reeb's paintings of contact sheets that we have forgotten that this is an unusual enterprise. Contact sheets are a type of photographic embryo, which are intended for sorting and selection. In newspaper photography, descisions lie in the hands of the editor. Although he was not present at the location of the occurrence, he chooses the photograph that will represent it, and the one that he chooses assumes the role of a witness. All the other photographs are denied public status and validity as witnesses; they remain forgotten in the newsroom drawers. Here David Reeve enters the picture: he takes them and turns them into the subject of the painting.[5]

The painted contact sheets always have a double subject: the photographed figure, and the contact sheet itself, including holes, divisions and numbering (fig. 8). As a painter, Reeb places himself as close as possible to the place of occurrence - he uses the primary, unsorted reports. The contact sheet, denied witness status, turns under his hand into testimony whose authority and resilience are far greater than the faded words of yesterday's newspaper.

The photograph "Hospital in Gaza" (page 21) is exhibited here for the first time since the peace process began. The transformation from the status of political to historical witness is worthy of attention.

5. The contact sheet is one of the many representation methods that David Reeb employs. Itamar Levi points to one of the main aspects in Reeb's work: as a result of this proliferation, "an acute awareness of arbitrariness implicit in the act of repesentation is created." See cat. "David Reeb - Paintings 1982-1994", Tel Aviv Museum of Art, p. 128.

Danny Tabak: Indifference of Resolution to Image

If we place a magnifying glass[6] two centimeters in front of a color television screen, a grid will be revealed composed of the three colors of light: red, green and blue. A grid which does not differentiate between a refugee camp and the White House. The main technology by which society is managed is completely indifferent to the messages transmitted through it. The indifference of resolution to image is like the indifference of the grain in the photograph to the image. While Berest invents methods to confront the grain with the image, Danny Tabak follows the resolution to the stage where the painting hand is acting out of complete indifference to the image, even to the question of whether there is an image at all (fig. 9).

6. In 1993 Galia Bar-Or curated 3 one-person exhibitions under the name "Between Photograph and Painting (Blow-Up)", in which she emphasized the blow-up aspect in the paintings of three artists: Danny Tabak, Dganit Berest and Smadar Eliasaf. The exhibitions took place at the Mishkan Le'Omanut Museum of Art, Ein Harod.

The abstract attained in Tabak's painting (page 25) is in complete opposition to the abstract of, for example, Jackson Pollack: it is not only that the painting expanse does not open up before the painter's "self", but it shuts before him completely. Tabak paints square after square, from side to side horizontally, and when he finishes one line he goes down to the next one. Creation of the grid painting is a curtailed, blocked action, devoid of possibility of relief. It is hard to remain indifferent to the expressive power garnered in the dense oil-painted units, and to the totality of the painting surface (the All Over) that they comprise. Tabak's unrelenting extremity maintains a strong link to Georges Seurat's pointillist method. This mechanization of the painting act is a strongly expressive metaphor for technology's enormous power, that "something" lacking awareness or judgement, which every government can make use of for its own ends.

David Ginton: Painting as Photomontage*

"Happiness Behind the Trees" is the name of a series of oil pastel paintings on paper, which David Ginton painted in 1985 (page 15). The painting acts here as photomontage: a connection of scene fragments from different photographs, photographed again. The uniform surface attained creates expectations of a picture that is unified in terms of time, place and scene. In fact the photomontage damages the credibility of the photograph and its ability to give evidence of "what was".[7]

While collage externalizes the acts of cutting, tearing and gluing - when at the same time it is both based on and establishes the photograph's credibility - photomontage serves to refute it. The fake unity that he attains points to a torn, dismantled world, and the authority of the photograph as representative of solid truth is damaged. Montage was one of the modes of action often used by Surrealist photographers (figs. 10&16).[8]

The montage-like structure of Ginton's paintings - the depth of the field which has been erased, the shadows on the faces that have turned into burns, the Ficus plant that crosses the painting horizontally, the artichoke threatening to land on the face, the feet penetrating from the upper part of the painting - this is what builds the nightmare threatening to break down at any moment.

7. Roland Barthes, Camera Lucida (Farrar, Straus and Giroux, Inc., 1981), p. 107.

16.

RAOUL UBAC, THE BEDROOM, 1936

ראול אובק, חדר-שינה, 1936

8. Rosalind Krauss, "Photography in the Service of Surrealism", cat. L'amour Fou, 1985.

David Goss: Lifting Television's Eyes

At what age does the child recognize that television films and the figures in them are operating outside his own world? That the rhythm and plot are not connected to him or to the people around him; that he is a spectator who cannot deviate from his role, as the movie characters cannot deviate from the plot of the movie? At the stage of the "all powerful" magician, the two circles still act as one. In the process of leaving this stage, a differentiation begins to form between "self" and "non-self", and a mourning process begins for the loss of unity between object and subject.

David Goss' blue series of paintings (page 27; also fig. 17) deals exactly with this critical point. Using a slow painting technique, in each of the paintings he "copies" a frame that was cut off from the sequence of the movie. The painting time is the child's lost time - the changes, shifts, additions, disappearances and coverings up are the painter's belated enterprise, a painter whose consciousness of separation is still fighting his drive for unity, and vice versa.

Goss removes images from their cultural context and places them in other contexts: he reacts to 19th century romantic Orientalism with the orientalization of Cuban or Spanish scenes, or of Vermeer's paintings. The phthalocyanine which dominates the paintings is the blue television screen light, as it is the porcelain blue of delft.

17.

DAVID GOSS, UNTITLED, (DETAIL)
44.5X29.5, 1993-1994

דייויד גוס, ללא כותרת (פרט),
1993-1994 , 44.5X29.5

YACOV MISHORI

BORN 1952, TEL AVIV, ISRAEL

SELF TAUGHT

LIVES IN TEL AVIV

TEACHES AT THE TEL AVIV MUSEUM WORKSHOPS

SELECTED ONE-PERSON EXHIBITS

ARTIFACT GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1990

ARTIFACT GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1992

PRESENTATION, ARTISTS' STUDIOS, TEL AVIV, 1993

SELECTED GROUP EXHIBITS

NEW ABSTRACT, ARTISTS' STUDIOS, TEL AVIV, 1992

SUBTROPICAL, TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1993

SEPARATE WORLDS, TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1994

י ע ק ב מ י ש ו ר י

נולד ב-1952 בתל-אביב

אוטודידקט

גר בתל-אביב

מלמד בסדנאות מוזיאון תל-אביב

תערוכות יחיד נבחרות:

גלריה ארטיפקט תל-אביב, 1990

גלריה ארטיפקט תל-אביב, 1992

בהופעה, סדנאות האמנים תל-אביב, 1993

תערוכות קבוצתיות נבחרות:

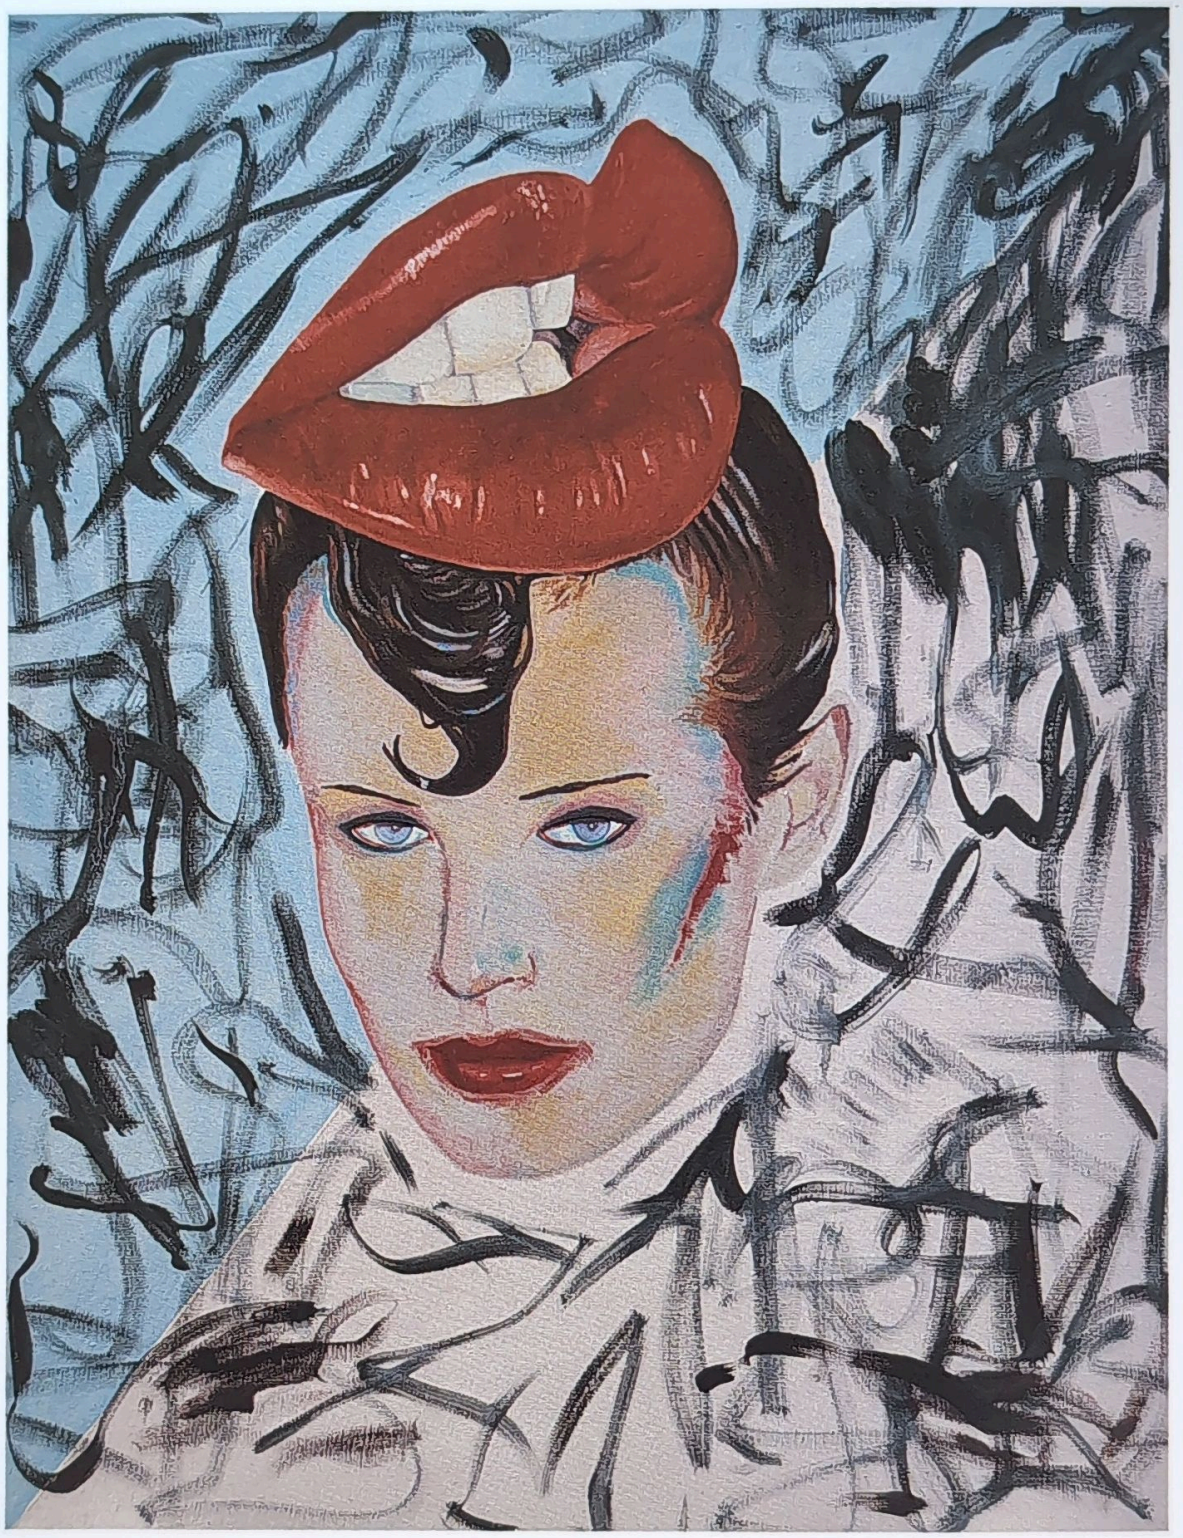

מופשט חדש, סדנאות האמנים תל-אביב, 1992

סובטרופי, מוזיאון תל-אביב, 1993

עולמות נפרדים, מוזיאון תל-אביב, 1994

דיוקן עצמי, שמן על בד, 150 X 190, 1979-1980

SELF-PORTRAIT, OIL ON CANVAS, 190X150, 1979-1980

דוד גינתון

DAVID GINTON

נולד ב-1947 בתל-אביב

גר בתל-אביב

תערוכות יחיד נבחרות:

ציורים כחול לבן, גלריה נבעון, תל-אביב, 1993

ציור אידיאלי 1978-81, הגלריה הליפודית של החוג לאמנות, אוניברסיטת חיפה, 1993

תערוכות קבוצתיות נבחרות:

חדשות 1, מוזיאון תל-אביב, 1980

שלוש מציאויות, סדנאות האמנים תל-אביב, 1993

תערוכת חברים, מוזיאון חיפה, 1994

BORN 1947, TEL AVIV, ISRAEL

LIVES IN TEL AVIV

SELECTED ONE-PERSON EXHIBITS

PAINTINGS IN BLUE AND WHITE, GIVON GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1993

IDEAL PAINTING 1978-81, GALLERY OF THE ART DEPARTMENT HAIFA UNIVERSITY, 1993

SELECTED GROUP EXHIBITS

NEWS ONE, TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1980

THREE REALITIES, ARTISTS' STUDIOS, TEL AVIV, 1993

FRIENDS' EXHIBIT, HAIFA MUSEUM, 1994

אושר מאחורי העצים, פנדה על נייר, 101 X 71, 1985

HAPPINESS BEHIND THE TREES, OIL PASTEL ON PAPER, 71X101, 1985

DGANIT BEREST

BORN IN TEL AVIV, ISRAEL

GRADUATED BETZALEL ACADEMY, 1973

GRADUATE OF PRATT INSTITUTE, NEW YORK, 1980

TEACHES PAINTING AND PHOTOGRAPHY

AT THE RAMAT HASHARON ART TEACHER'S COLLAGE

LIVES IN TEL AVIV

SELECTED ONE-PERSON EXHIBITS

PORTRAITS AND LANDSCAPES, JULIE M. GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1985

LOCH NESS INVESTIGATIONS, ISRAEL MUSEUM, JERUSALEM, 1989

SMALL BATHER, JULIE M. GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1993

SELECTED GROUP EXHIBITS

ISRAELI ARTISTS, TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1992

POSTSCRIPTS, UNIVERSITY ART GALLERY, TEL AVIV UNIVERSITY, 1992

SUBTROPICAL, TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1993

ד ג נ י ת ב ר ס ט

נולדה בתל-אביב

בוגרת בצלאל, 1973

בוגרת מכון פראט ניו-יורק, 1980

מלמדת ציור וצילום במדרשה להכשרת מורים לאמנות רמת-השרון

גרה בתל-אביב

תערוכות יחיד נבחרות:

פורטרטים ונופים, גלריה גיולי מ. תל-אביב, 1985

חקירות לוך נס, מוזיאון ישראל, ירושלים, 1989

מתרחץ קטן במיספרים, גלריה גיולי מ. תל-אביב, 1993

תערוכות קבוצתיות נבחרות:

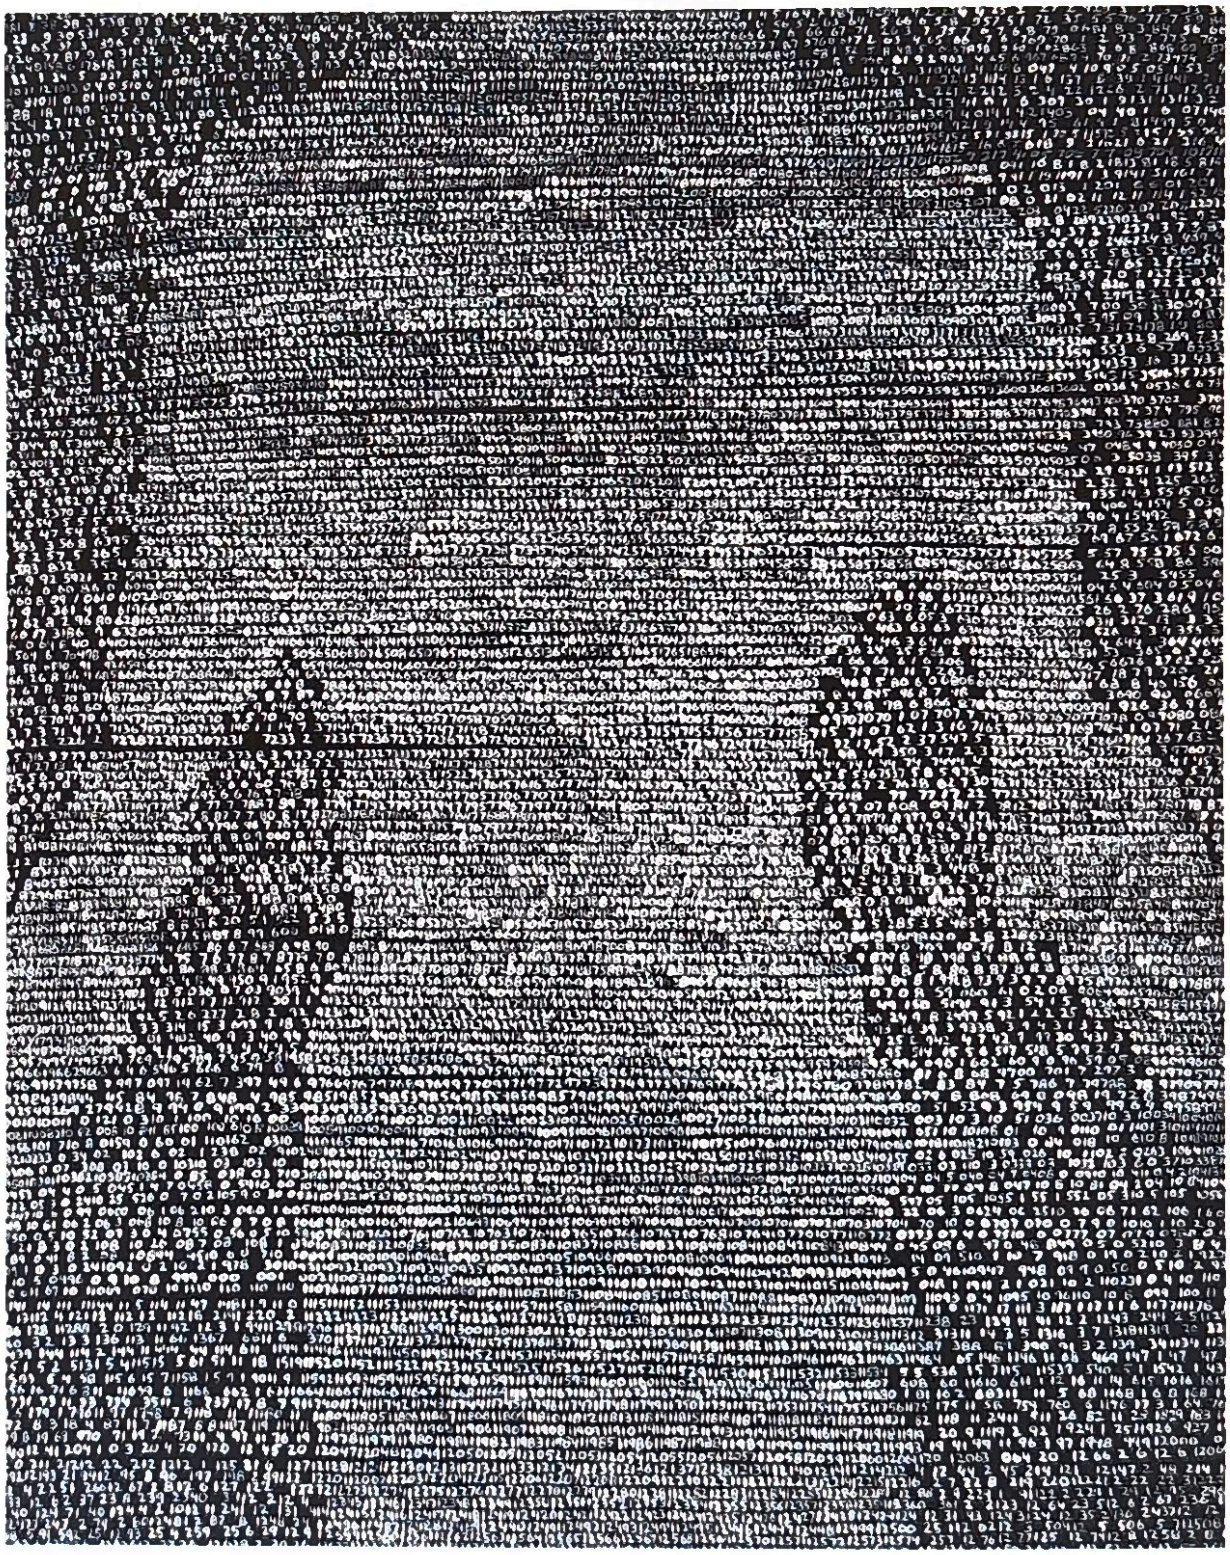

אמנים ישראליים, מוזיאון תל-אביב, 1992

אחרית דבר, הגלריה האוניברסיטאית לאמנות, אוניברסיטת תל-אביב, 1992

סובטרופי, מוזיאון תל-אביב, 1993

מתרחץ קטן, על-פי רומאן אופאלקה, אקריליק על בד, 40 X 50, 1993

SMALL BATHER INSPIRED BY ROMAN OPALKA, ACRYLIC ON CANVAS, 50X40, 1993

ARNON BEN-DAVID

BORN 1950, TEL AVIV, ISRAEL

GRADUATED BETZALEL ACADEMY, 1977

GRADUATE OF HUNTER COLLAGE, NEW YORK, 1983

LIVES IN TEL AVIV

SELECTED ONE-PERSON EXHIBITS

"THE PENTAGON", ABC NO RIO, NEW YORK, 1984

LIFE AFTER DEATH, GALLERY SHLOOSH, TEL AVIV, 1990

"MIR ZANEN DO", THE RAMAT GAN MUSEUM, RAMAT GAN, 1991

SELECTED GROUP EXHIBITS

OPPOSING FORCE, HALLWALLS, BUFFALO, NEW YORK, 1984

DEMOCRACY: POLITICS AND ELECTION, DIA ART

FOUNDATION, NEW YORK, 1988

ISRAELI ARTISTS, KUNSTHALLE DUSSELDORF, GERMANY,

ARTIST'S HOUSE MOSCOW, ISRAEL MUSEUM JERUSALEM, 1991

א ר נ ו ן ב ן - ד ו ד

נולד ב-1950 בתל-אביב

בוגר בצלאל, 1977

בוגר האנטר קולגי ניו-יורק, 1983

גר בתל-אביב

תערוכות יחיד נבחרות:

הפנטגון, איי - בי - סי - נו - ריו, ניו-יורק, 1984

LIFE AFTER DEATH , גלריה שלוש תל-אביב, 1990

מיר זענען דא, מוזיאון רמת-גן, 1991

תערוכות קבוצתיות נבחרות:

OPPOSING FORCE , הולוולס, באפאלו ניו-יורק, 1984

דמוקרטיה; פוליטיקה ובחירות, דיה ארט פאונדיישן, ניו-יורק, 1988

אמנים ישראלים, קונסטהאלה דיסלדורף, בית

האמנים מוסקווה, מוזיאון ישראל ירושלים, 1991

ציור אנאלוגי לדפוס אופסט , אקריליק על בד, 93.5 X 77.5, 1990

ANALOGICAL PAINTING TO OFFSET PRINT.
ACRYLIC ON CANVAS 77.5X93.5. 1990

DOWN WITH THE OCCUPATION

דוד ריב DAVID REEB

BORN 1952, REHOVOT, ISRAEL

GRADUATED BETZALEL ACADEMY, 1978

TEACHES AT THE KALISHER ART SCHOOL
IN TEL AVIV FROM 1986

LIVES IN TEL AVIV

SELECTED ONE-PERSON EXHIBITS

TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1983

BOGRASHOV GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1993

TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1994

SELECTED GROUP EXHIBITS

ISRAELI AND PALESTINIAN
ARTISTS AGAINST THE OCCUPATION, EAST
JERUSALEM, NAZARETH, HAIFA, 1985

DOWN WITH THE OCCUPATION, POSTER EXHIBIT
PRESENTED IN ISRAEL AND ABROAD, 1987

ASIAN-EUROPEAN ART BIENNALE, ANKARA, 1990

OLIVE GREEN, BOGRASHOV GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1992

נולד ב-1952 ברחובות

בוגר בצלאל, 1978

מלמד בבית-ספר קלישר בתל-אביב החל מ-1986
גר בתל-אביב

תערוכות יחיד נבחרות:

מוזיאון תל-אביב לאמנות, 1983

גלריה בוגרשוב תל-אביב, 1993

מוזיאון תל-אביב לאמנות, 1994

תערוכות קבוצתיות נבחרות:

אמנים ישראלים ופלסטינים נגד הכיבוש ובעד חופש הביטוי,
מזי ירושלים, תל-אביב, נצרת, חיפה, 1985

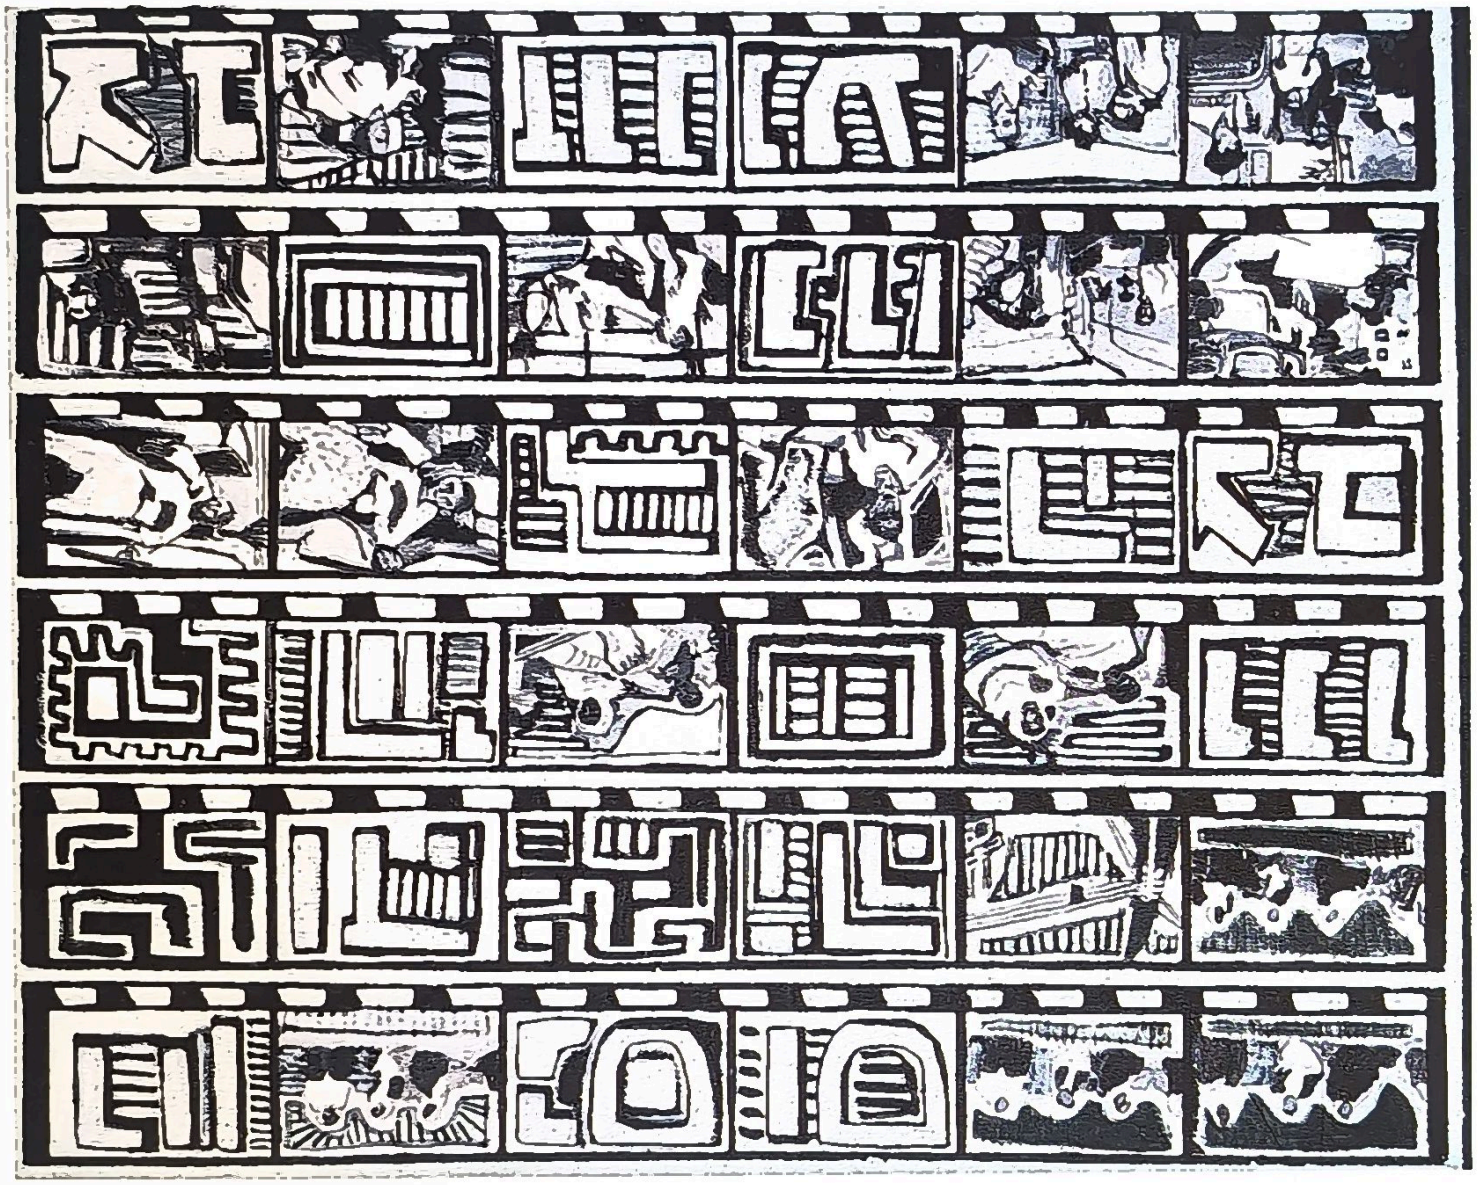

"די לכיבוש", תערוכת פוסטרים
שהוצגה במקומות שונים בארץ ובחו"ל, 1987

ביאנאלת אירופה-אסיה, אנקרה, 1990

"ירוק זית", גלריה בוגרשוב תל-אביב, 1992

קונטאקט ע"פ תצלומים מבית-חולים בעזה,
צבע תעשייתי ואקריליק על בד, 164 X 130, 1990
ע"פ תצלומים של מיכל היימן

HOSPITAL GREEN CONTACT,
INDUSTRIAL PAINT AND ACRYLIC ON CANVAS 130X164, 1990
BASED ON PHOTOGRAPHS OF MICHAL HEIMAN

YITZHAK LIVNEH

BORN 1952, ASHKELON, ISRAEL

GRADUATED BETZALEL ACADEMY, 1977

GRADUATE OF HUNTER COLLAGE, NEW YORK, 1981

TEACHES AT THE BETZALEL

ACADEMY OF ART AND DESIGN SINCE 1984

LIVES IN JERUSALEM

SELECTED ONE-PERSON EXHIBITS

MIRRORS, ARTIFACT GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1990

VERONICA, ARTIFACT GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1992

SELECTED GROUP EXHIBITS

SUBTROPICAL, TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1993

THE RANGE OF REALISM, TEL AVIV MUSEUM OF ART, 1993

BORKOVSKY, KUPFERMAN, LIVNEH

MARY FAUZI GALLERY, TEL AVIV, 1994

יצחק ליבנה

נולד ב-1952 באשקלון

בוגר בצלאל, 1977

בוגר האנטר קולגי ניו-יורק, 1981

מלמד באקדמיה לאמנות ועיצוב בצלאל מ-1984

גר בירושלים

תערוכות יחיד נבחרות:

מראות, גלריה ארטיפקט, תל-אביב, 1990

ורוניקה, גלריה ארטיפקט, תל-אביב, 1992

תערוכות קבוצתיות נבחרות:

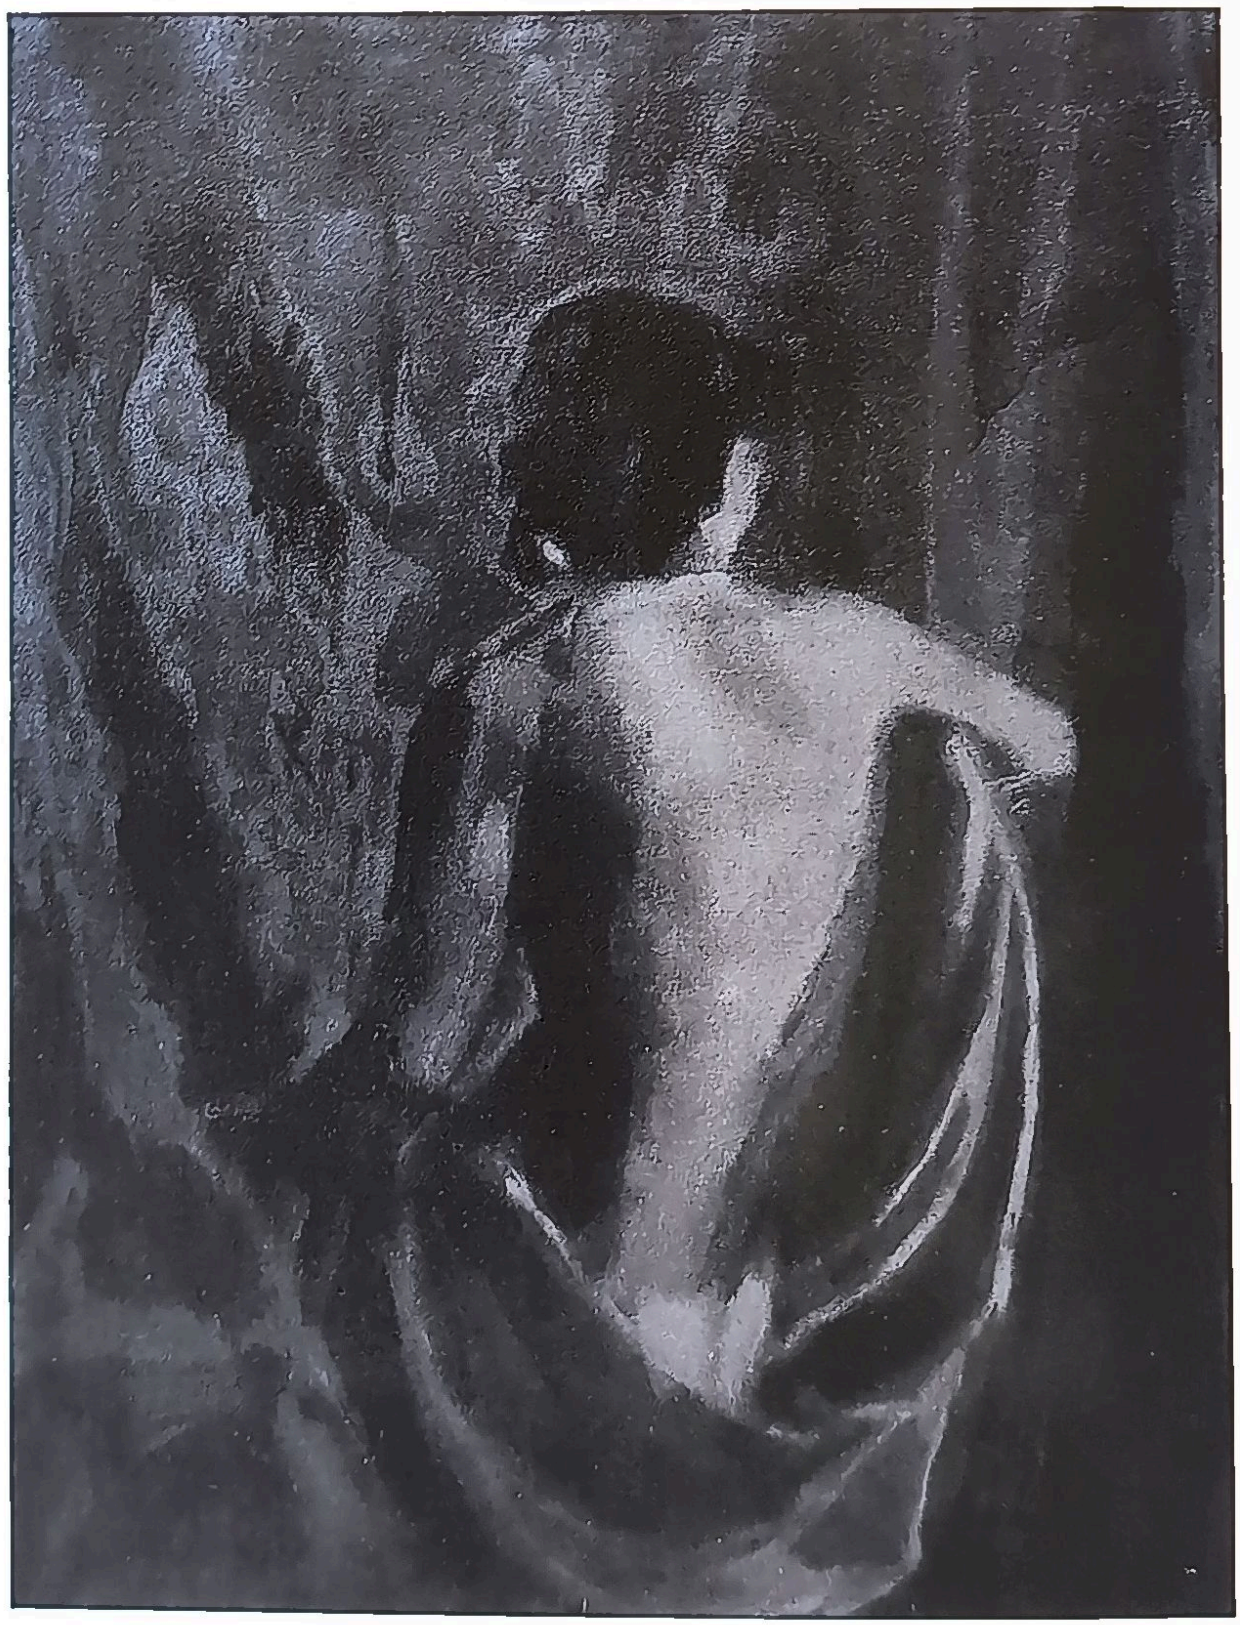

סובטרופי, מוזיאון תל-אביב, 1993

טווח הריאליזם, מוזיאון תל-אביב, 1993

בורוקובסקי, קופפרמן, ליבנה, גלריה מרי פאוזי, תל-אביב, 1994

עירום בסטודיו, שמן על בד, 65 X 87, 1994

NUDE IN STUDIO, OIL ON CANVAS 87X65, 1994

DANNY TABAK דני טבק

BORN 1961, REHOVOT, ISRAEL

GRADUATED BETZALEL ACADEMY, 1990

LIVES IN JERUSALEM

ONE-PERSON EXHIBIT

BETWEEN PHOTOGRAPHY AND PAINTING (BLOW-UP), MISHKAN LE'OMANUT MUSEUM OF ART, EIN HAROD, 1993

SELECTED GROUP EXHIBITS

THE GRID IN ISRAELI ART, GALLERY KALISHER FIVE, TEL AVIV, 1991

SCREEN PAINTING, GALLERY G, JERUSALEM, 1992

נולד ב-1961 ברחובות

בוגר בצלאל, 1990

גר בירושלים

תערוכת יחיד:

בין צילום לציור, המישכן לאמנות, עין-חרוד, 1993

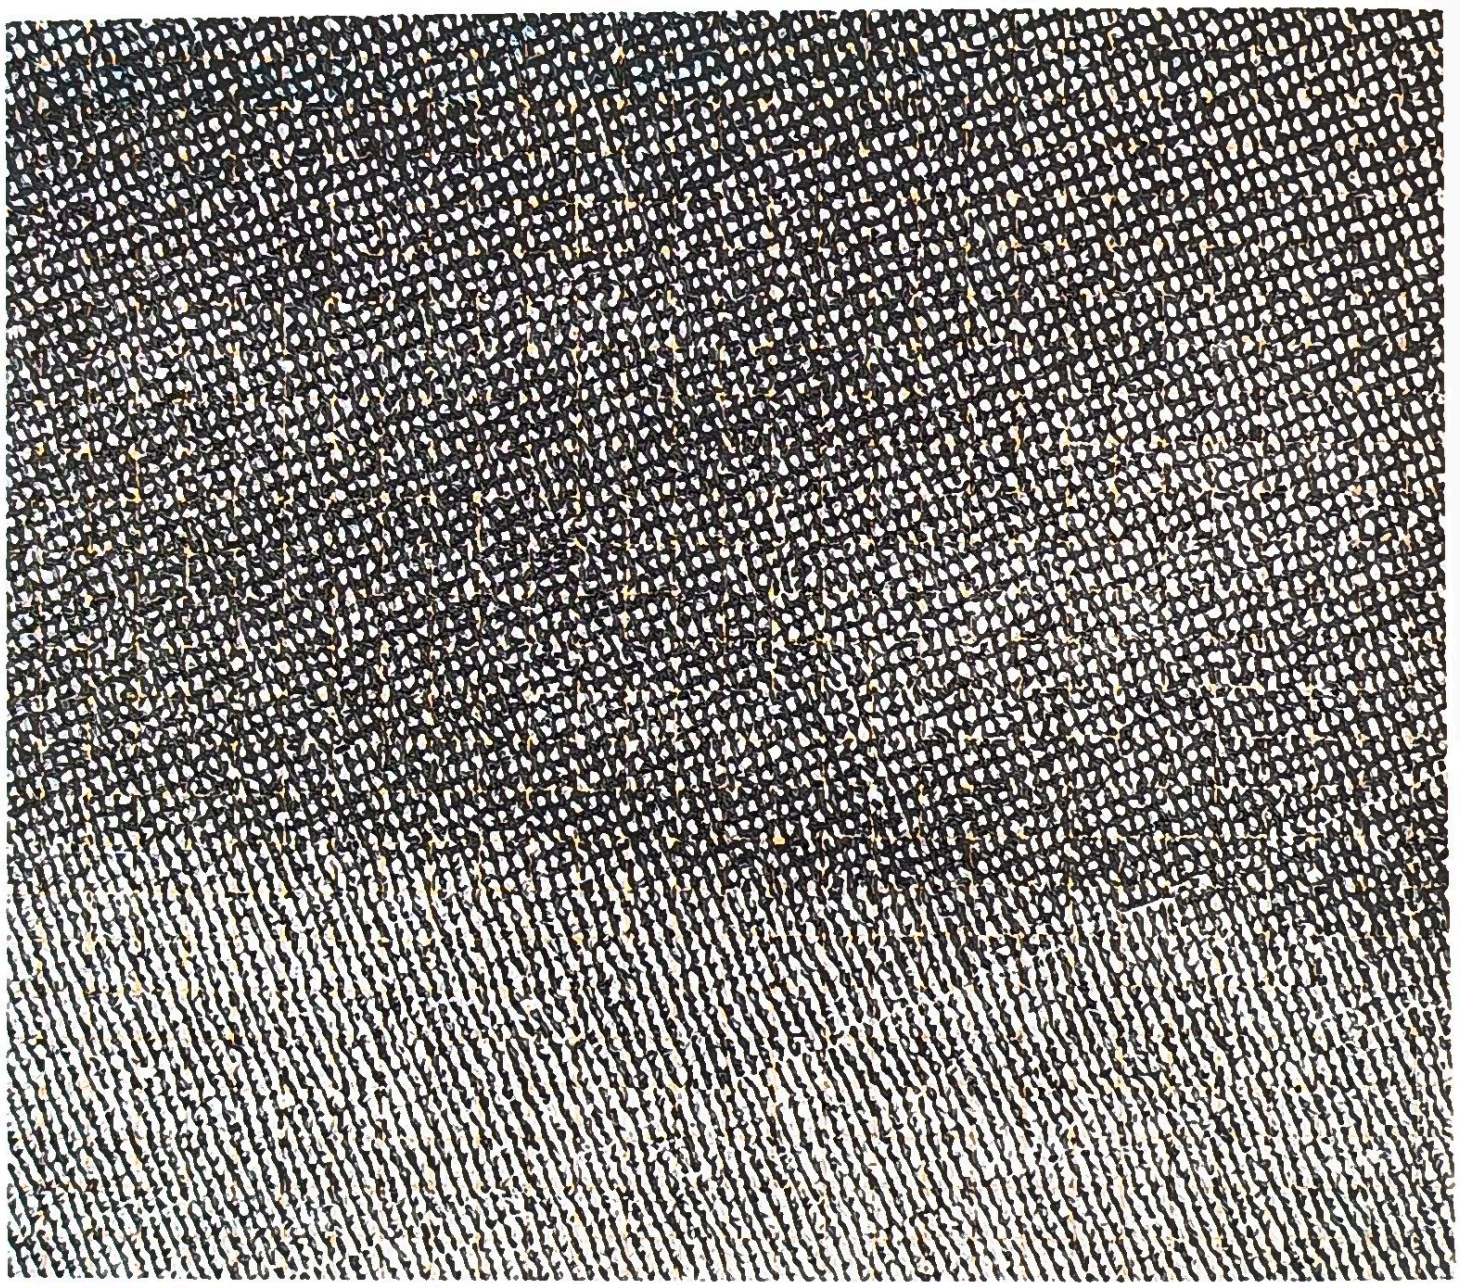

תערוכות קבוצתיות נבחרות:

השריג באמנות הישראלית, גלריה קלישר חמש, תל-אביב, 1991

ציור מסך, גלריה גימל, ירושלים, 1992

שמן על בד, 160 X 185, 1994

OIL ON CANVAS, 185X160, 1994

דויד גוס DAVID GOSS

נולד ב-1966, קייפטאון, דרום אפריקה
בוגר בצלאל, 1994
גר בתל-אביב
1994 תערוכת בוגרי בצלאל

BORN 1966, CAPETOWN, SOUTH AFRICA
GRADUATED BETZALEL ACADEMY, 1994
LIVES IN TEL AVIV
1994 - EXHIBITION OF BETZALEL GRADUATES

ללא כותרת, 44.5 X 29.5, 1993-1994
UNTITLED, 29.5X44.5, 1993-1994